How I made a waffle from a molehill

Brian Lee

In case anyone thinks it's easy to run this little rag, a mini controversy erupted last month that might change your mind.

"Wafflegate" started out as an innocent good news story in which the Pender Harbour and Area Residents' Association announced a solution to the perilous fate of Madeira Park's community gardens.

On Nov. 14, PHARA issued the following:

"The good news is that once the roof is replaced, the Pender Harbour Community Club has agreed to take over both maintenance and fundraising for the gardens."

Yay.

Since it was an extremely simple story and PHARA has always been reliable, I might have just run with it.

But I thought I should be a good reporter and quickly confirm from the PHCC that it was accurate.

I also wanted to give the PHCC an opportunity to claim some well-deserved good will for saving this community asset.

I'll admit to a bias here — two generations of my family have served on the community club board and I include it as one of our most important community organizations.

But I was also on a deadline with 20 other minor distractions flooding my inbox so I was just expecting a quick confirmation that the club would indeed maintain the gardens after the hall's roof was completed.

A few days later, a PHCC board member confirmed by email that the board had agreed to take on the gardens.

That was all I needed to put this story to bed and wait for my Canadian Association of Journalists award to arrive for breaking this nugget.

In hindsight, I should have paid more attention to the part where he also hinted that PHARA's announcement only reflected "somewhat what the board has agreed to."

He insisted I contact the president of the PHCC for their official response.

"No, nothing has been decided yet," she told me.

"We the community club are busy trying to get the hall project underway and we have not made a decision on the gardens as of yet."

Suddenly my simple little story had taken a complicated turn.

I had one "yes," one partial "yes" and one "no."

Now confused, I sought further clarification:

"OK, so why has PHARA announced that the community club has then? I'm confused," I asked.

"It is community club property, I am sure we will have to figure something out," she said.

"We just need to do the roof project right now."

In my story, I described this inconvenient contradiction as a "waffle," which prompted the PHCC's response on p. 10.

One definition of waffling is "to avoid making a definitive decision."

Perhaps I might have used "wavered" or "hesitated" instead.

But I still would have been wrong because the issue now seems to be that PHARA may have taken the club's partial commitment as a full one, and then I distorted it further.

I apologize for adding to the muddle.

To clarify for anyone still confused, the PHCC did not "waffle" but are simply unable to commit to the maintenance of the gardens until after their roof construction is completed.

(But they might.)

“Stories and Songs from the Heart,” live, from Cape Breton, the Pender Harbour Music Society is pleased to welcome singer/songwriter, multi-instrumentalist and storyteller, J. P. Cormier. His music transcends genres and borders, blending elements of folk, bluegrass, Celtic and country.

P. H. WOMEN’S CONNECTION PRESENTS SIMON GIDORA AND ISABELLA PERRON: Tue. Jan. 27, 10 a.m.

The Pender Harbour Women’s Connection is ushering in 2026 by proudly presenting Simon Gidora with his partner, Isabella Perron, on Jan. 27. Although this young couple are developing an international music career, they have chosen to make Madeira Park their home.

Gidora was raised on the Coast and began his musical career early in life taking violin lessons and performing with the Coast String Fiddlers (which he now conducts). As a teenager his astounding violin solo in the Pender Harbour Chamber Music 2014 festival “Rising Star” program, raised many eyebrows in admiration. In the same year, he was part of the highly acclaimed Forza String Quartet. As well as continuing violin studies, he went on to study voice, conducting, piano and composition. Since returning to the Sunshine Coast, he has taken on a plethora of musical duties, including an active teaching schedule and conducting the Sunshine Coast Community Orchestra.

Perron, born in Montreal, is also a multitasking musician — violinist, violist, singer, and pianist — known for her expressive artistry and belief in music’s healing power. She also began her musical life early, with her solo debut at age 7 and the release of her first album at age 12. She is now performing world-wide.

Although both have extensive classical academic training, they embrace many genres and have received numerous awards. Together, they have formed Duo Mycelia, a multi-genre duo that writes and performs original music across Canada. Come along and meet these talented young musicians who will tell a bit of their background, why they came here, future plans, and will entice us to embrace the new year by performing some lively Celtic tunes.

Pender Harbour School of Music doors open at 9:30 a.m.. Drop-in fee is $4 and refreshments are included.

Loon Foundation bulks up board at Nov. 29 AGM

The Loon Foundation has re-established a full board of directors after dropping to the minimum required under the societies act in October.

The Harbour Spiel reported in November that the organization behind the PODS project lost five of seven directors shortly before its longtime executive director, Michael Jackson, also stepped down.

At the foundation's annual general meeting in Madeira Park on Nov. 29, the board was restored with seven new directors stepping up to help guide the non-profit during the construction phase of its $30 million-plus PODS project in Irvines Landing.

In addition to returning directors Lana Brandt, interim executive director, Will Corse and Brendan Glauser, the Loon Foundation has added:

Candace T. Campo (xets'emits'a), cultural director for the shishálh Nation, anthropologist, and founder of Talaysay Tours.

Ihe hiwus (Chief) Lenora Joe, Chief of the shishálh Nation and community leader.

Michelle Johnston, vice president, communications, at Syntax Strategic and former deputy director of communications to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau.

Mike McDermid, founding member of the Ocean Wise seafood program and co-founder of The Fish Counter, an award-winning sustainable seafood market and restaurant in Vancouver.

Kathy Minehan, a Sunshine Coast resident and professional geologist (retired) with over 30 years in environmental consulting, including environmental field investigations, technical reporting and senior project management.

Bob Patrick, a long-time resident of Sechelt, professor of geography and planning at the University of Saskatchewan and a member of the Global Institute for Water Security.

Christine Thomas, a registered professional biologist with over 25 years in environmental consulting, specializing in assessing and managing the impacts of contaminants on the environment.

Anodonta: Fresh water mussels of Hotel Lake

The Hotel Lake Advisory Association continues to expand residents' understanding of local freshwater ecology.

This summer, Brian Croft was taking video of a prickly sculpin dashing about in Hotel Lake when he said the camera caught "something."

"Some weeks later when editing I saw this weird looking creature, so I froze the frame and took a screenshot," Croft said.

It turned out to be Anodonta, a genus of freshwater mussel.

Croft told the Harbour Spiel that the precise identity (scientific names include the genus and species, as in "Homo sapiens") is not easy to find.

Although only seven species of freshwater mussels exist in the Pacific Northwest, it is no simple task to positively identify the mussels in Hotel Lake.

The reasons for this are further explained on the HLAA website at www.hotellakeadvisory.com/freshwa- termussels.

It wasn't a new discovery — anyone who has snorkelled in local lakes has likely seen signs of mussels but Croft said "It may come as a surprise how important these small creatures are to the health of the lake."

According to the HLAA "mussels" page, nearly three-quarters of the 297 native freshwater mussel species in North America are believed to be imperilled and in the last century, 35 species are thought to have become extinct.

Freshwater mussels often live in densely populated groups or beds, partially buried in the sand, gravel or silty-bottom of a body of water.

From the HLAA mussels page: "Once established as adults, they can move short distances to escape adverse environmental conditions and can also burrow down into the lake bottom.

"Our Hotel Lake mussels are long-term brooders that breed in the summer and spawn in the fall or spring.

"Living only 10 to 15 years, our local Anodonta mussels have one of the shortest lifespans of all freshwater mussels."

Croft writes that mussels rely on the presence of a specific or non-specific host-fish to reproduce effectively and the loss or absence of a host-fish will lead to the eventual loss of that associated mussel community.

That's important to the local ecological web because they continuously ingest water into their top siphon, filtering, digesting and excreting useful nutrients for underwater insects.

Filtered water, fecal material and undigestible particles are expelled back into the habitat thus removing pollutants, algae, zooplankton and bacteria from the water.

For more information on the local fresh water mussel population and the work the HLAA is doing, visit www.hotellakeadvisory.com.

Brian Croft/Hotel Lake Advisory Association

This summer while taking video of a prickly sculpin (Cottus asper) dashing about in Hotel Lake, Brian Croft caught this image (left) of a strange 'something.' The creatures turned out to be Anodonta, a genus of freshwater mussels. They were easily missed because they were covered in dense algae. The photo on the right is earlier video frame of a Hotel Lake Anodonta mussel bed relatively free of algae cover. 'These are quite prevalent on the floor of Hotel Lake and wherever you see them the water quality is very clear, largely because these mussels filter the water,' says Croft. They can number in the thousands and, cumulatively, they can represent the largest animal biomass in the waterbody where they live.

P. H. Community Club clarifies community garden intentions

Editor,

The Dec. 2025 Harbour Spiel (p. 7), “Despite announcement, community gardens’ fate still unclear,” states that PHARA announced in their November newsletter, “that the P. H. Community Club, owner of the community hall property beside the Madeira Park Elementary School field, agreed to take over both maintenance and fundraising for the gardens on their property.”

And further states, “Since that time, the PHCC has waffled on that commitment.”

This characterization is inaccurate and does a disservice to the many volunteers and board members of the PHCC.

In a letter to the editor, “The end of our community gardens?” (Harbour Spiel, Oct. 2025, p. 15), PHARA informed the community of all of their attempts to continue the legacy of Don Fraser and his generosity of maintaining the gardens for the past 25 years.

Although an appreciated effort, PHARA took on the responsibility of exploring options for maintaining the gardens without consulting the PHCC.

The October letter goes on to declare PHARA’s unsuccessful attempts to solve the issue of costs and maintenance of the community gardens, stating, “We are frustrated to say that every avenue we tried has reached a dead end.”

PHARA then met with two PHCC board members and others to discuss possible next steps to find a way to maintain the gardens.

The discussions from that meeting were reported to the full PHCC board, which confirmed that, as the gardens are on PHCC property, the gardens fall under PHCC’s responsibility in principle.

The PHCC board also decided that it would determine a concrete way forward for the gardens after completion of its renovations and upgrade project, so that any commitment would be realistic and sustainable.

This sequence of events shows a board acting cautiously and responsibly, not “waffling” on a commitment it never formally made in the terms described in your article.

The PHCC has recognized its responsibility for the gardens but has also been clear that it must first complete a major renovation and upgrade to the hall before it can plan and resource ongoing garden maintenance and fundraising properly.

We respectfully request that you publish a clarification to reflect these facts and to remove the implication that PHCC has backed away from a firm promise.

Doing so would help ensure readers receive an accurate picture of both PHARA’s acknowledged fundraising limits and the PHCC’s considered approach to meeting its responsibilities.

Adamson: NDP losing the plot

Editor,

Recent events at the University of Victoria, and the response that followed in the legislature, raise concerns that go beyond partisanship.

A member of MLA Dallas Brodie's entourage — specifically her cameraman — was physically assaulted while filming on campus.

The incident was captured on video.

When MLA Brodie asked Premier David Eby to condemn the violence, he chose not to do so.

Instead, he replied, "I suspect the member got exactly what she wanted at the university," and added,

"Her conduct is reprehensible.

"It is embarrassing.

"I wish she would stop it."

These remarks avoided the central issue — the violent targeting of someone accompanying an elected representative in the course of their work.

A premier does not need to agree with an MLA to uphold a basic democratic standard.

When political violence occurs, leadership demands a clear, unambiguous response.

What British Columbians heard instead was deflection and personal attack — not a rejection of violence.

This moment matters.

Canada is experiencing a rise in political hostility, and the boundaries that once protected democratic engagement are being tested.

When a premier refuses to condemn violence because he disagrees with the person reporting it, he sends a dangerous message — that intimidation is permissible when aimed at those outside his party's narrative.

That is not leadership.

That is not the standard this province deserves.

Political violence cannot be excused, minimized or reframed.

It must be condemned every time, without qualification and without regard for who is asking the question.

It is time to re-establish that boundary.

British Columbia needs leaders who will speak honestly, act responsibly, and defend the democratic rights and physical safety of everyone who participates in our political process — not only those who share the government's views.

The health of our democracy depends on it.

Heritage conservation act clarification

*Leonard Lee
Area A director, SCRCD*

The entire Sunshine Coast is a potential archeological site protected by the BC Heritage Conservation Act.

The province maintains a register of BC heritage sites and objects and the HCA decides if a provincial alteration permit is required to make any improvements as defined in the Builders Lien Act or any that would decrease the heritage value of a site or object.

To summarize, it's illegal to disturb ground on a registered site without a permit, but it goes beyond this to include damaging, desecrating, or altering a provincial heritage site or a provincial heritage object if you stumble upon an unrecorded site or object.

Even if a property isn't in the registry, it's still illegal to damage, alter or remove a heritage object from a site that contains evidence of human habitation or use before 1846.

If a heritage object is encountered while work is underway, a permit must be acquired to continue.

When someone applies for an SCRCD development permit or building permit, often to excavate part of their property to build a home, we check the provincial registry to see if the property is in the registry, and then the applicant will be advised on prudent next steps.

The SCRCD and many home builders obtain a permit before breaking ground, even on properties not in the registry, because it typically lowers costs and avoids work stoppages if an artifact is encountered.

Changes proposed by the SCRCD to the HCA were intended to streamline the permitting process but we did not propose changes to basic archeological site protection as detailed in the current version of the HCA.

The parcel tax increase will build long-term reserves by $45,000 a year ($68 per customer) and fund the short-term capital plan including watermain replacements, Garden Bay treatment plant upgrades, and upgrades to meet fire flow standards ($105.87 per customer).

The average South Pender water service cost is up by $135 (8.85 per cent) for an annual cost of $1,660, which includes a parcel tax of $810 ($210 or a 35 per cent increase) and a user fee of $850 (a decrease of $75.00 or -8.88 per cent).

The parcel tax increase will build long-term capital reserves by $100,000 a year, or $94.88 per customer, and fund the short-term capital plan including watermain replacements and infrastructure upgrades to meet fire flow standards ($115.12 per customer).

In 2026, North and South Pender will implement volume-based, variable user fees starting at $850 a year, an estimate of what 45 per cent of customers will be charged, with the remaining 55 per cent of customers facing higher user fees for higher water use.

With property-specific service fees outdated by nearly 20 years and the introduction of water meters, bylaw 778 was approved to increase the charge for turning on and off water service at the curb from $50 to $100 and to introduce fees of $2,500 for physically disconnecting a water service from the system.

Other charges will include $1,300 to test and replace a meter (unless the original meter was over-registering use by two per cent or more) and $200 for billing adjustments because of leaks.

WASTEWATER SERVICE RATES

All Area A wastewater (sewage) plants have comprehensive asset management plans in place for several years now, with frontage fees and user utility fees calculated and approved years in advance.

Planned operating costs and capital reserves are reviewed annually to identify plants showing significant deviance from their plan, which is then corrected with a bylaw update to increase or decrease the utility fees.

Most plants didn't need a bylaw amendment, so 2026 rates will remain as planned, which is a $50 frontage fee increase and no user fee increase (Painted Boat Resort will have the largest increase at 4.54 per cent).

The Lee Bay plant has suffered an operations deficit for several years, so user fees will be increased by $127.33 (15.86 per cent), which when added to the pre-planned $50 frontage fee, will result in a $177 (15.16 per cent) increase.

Ed Ricketts: An iconic American marine biologist's time in Pender

Colin Levings,
Retired marine ecologist

There have been many stories written about the famous and infamous people who have visited Pender Harbour over the years but one person who has not been tagged, as far as I can tell, is American marine biologist Edward Flanders Ricketts (1897-1948).

Ricketts ran a biological supply company in Monterey, Calif.

In 1939, he published Between Pacific Tides with his friend Jack Calvin.

That book would go on to become the bible for marine ecologists on the west coast of North America and is now in its fifth edition.

Before the book was published, Ricketts visited Pender Harbour twice — once in 1930 and again in 1932.

Though he was here only a few days, some of his observations are mentioned in the book.

Not just a scientist, Ricketts was also well connected to the literary and philosophical scene in Monterey.

Famously, he was a friend of Nobel-prize winning author John Steinbeck and their careers were intertwined.

Steinbeck wrote the foreword to the 1948 revised edition of Between Pacific Tides and Ricketts is recognized as “Doc,” a main character in Steinbeck’s novel Cannery Row.

Ricketts’s work in Pender Harbour seemed to be relatively unknown until I started looking into his sampling in BC while I was writing a paper for a natural history journal.

In particular, his visit to BC in August 1930 had not been known before I found records of his barnacle and amphipod (sand fleas) collections from Charles Island at the mouth of the Harbour and at Donley’s Store near where the current prawn processing plant on Francis Peninsula sits now.

The specimens are in the Smithsonian Museum in Washington, D.C.

It is not clear how he got to Pender Harbour on this trip but he probably came from Vancouver Island on one of the Union Steamship vessels.

After driving up from California, he likely crossed into Canada via the ferry at Anacortes or the Olympic Peninsula.

I also found collection records in 1930 from Comox so perhaps he got the boat from there or Nanaimo as he also worked at Qualicum Beach.

We know from other collecting trips he made in BC that he went ashore while the steamship was in port for a few hours.

He likely stayed longer in Pender Harbour in 1930, however because to collect on Charles Island he would have needed a small boat and he collected barnacles on Aug. 11 and 13.

Perhaps he stayed for a few days at the Irvines Landing Hotel.

In 1932, Ricketts and Jack Calvin made a stop in Pender Harbour while on a trip from Tacoma, Wash. to Sitka, Alaska on Calvin’s 10-metre boat Grampus.

Harbour in the 1930s

Also aboard was another friend, New Yorker Joseph Campbell, an expert on literature and comparative religion.

Campbell was well known for his writings on “the hero’s journey.”

They crossed from Nanaimo and were in the Pender Harbour area July 3 and 4.

It is not exactly clear where they sampled in the Harbour on this trip but we know sure for he made observations on Agamemnon Channel, not far from Green Bay, while on their way further north.

He sampled with a small dredge net in the channel and noted the spectacular fauna of the tide-swept area, especially the large red sea cucumbers.

Specimens were sent to the museum at Harvard University in Massachusetts.

Ricketts mentions Pender Harbour in his book but it is not clear if this work took place in 1930 or the 1932 trip.

He was interested in the feeding habits of sea anemones and he fed one a chiton (sea cradle) to observe the digestion rate.

Also mentioned in his book are dredge collections from the mud in the Harbour where he found encrusting sponges and bristle worms.

It would be interesting to find out if there is any local historical information on Ricketts’s visits to Pender Harbour.

There are few details of his time in the area — most of his notebooks were lost in a 1936 fire in his laboratory.

However, Stanford University in California has done a remarkable job of putting available information on line for those wishing to dive deeper into his life and work at Pender Harbour and elsewhere in BC.

As well as being a “deep thinker” interested in the human condition, Ricketts was an amazing conservationist and scientist for his time and is credited with many original ideas on marine communities and ecosystems.

His observations in 1930 and 1932 were a component of his vast knowledge base on intertidal life on the west coast of North America and his visits here are part of the legacy of the Pender Harbour area.

PHHC welcomes new doctor to the Health Centre

The Pender Harbour Health Centre is excited to introduce and welcome Dr. Derek Williams, who is joining the Health Centre team in early January as our new part-time family doctor.

Dr. Williams is joining us from Montana in the U.S. and has been practicing medicine for 25 years.

During this time, he also served as a medical doctor for the U.S. Army in the Middle East and southwest Asia.

Dr. Williams brings many years of experience and knowledge to the Health Centre team.

In December, 200 unattached patients from the provincial health connect registry were connected to Dr Williams.

For many of these folks it had been years waiting to get connected to a doctor locally.

Over the coming months Dr Williams will be attaching more patients from the health connect registry.

If you do not have a physician and are not on the provincial registry, we encourage you to sign up at www.healthlinkbc.ca/find.../health-connect-registry.

In other good news, Dr. Bazilli has not indicated that she is leaving her practice anytime soon.

This means that if you are connected to Dr. Bazilli, you will remain attached to her when Dr. Williams joins the PHHC.

We are excited for Dr. Bazilli to have a fellow doctor at the Health Centre, and we are excited for them to collaborate moving forward.

The Pender Harbour Health Centre Board

Dr. Derek Williams, Family Physician (I) and Nick Gaskin, PHHC executive director.

and staff would like to thank Dr. Bazilli for her dedication and commitment to the PHHC, her community and her patients.

We would also like to thank D. Williams and his wife for choosing the PHHC and the Sunshine Coast to live and practice.

The leadership team at the Health Centre will continue to look at ways of bringing more family doctors to the PHHC.

If you have questions about PHHC doctors, we encourage you to reach out to Nick Gaskin our executive director at nick.gaskin@pender-harbourhealth.com.

Sunray cabin, Nelson Island (1964)

Harry Roberts finished his unique cabin at the Western end of Roberts Beach on Nelson Island in 1938. He lived there until the mid-1970s, when he became too ill to care for himself. Since that time, volunteers have cared for the cabin and it remains standing to this day. To withstand the intense southeast storms, Roberts built Sunray low to the ground using cedar logs towed from Texada Island and a healthy supply of materials deposited on the nearby beach.

The post and beam construction offers a glimpse into the mind of a talented builder with an artistic flair who seemed to react to changes in topography or a sudden abundance of materials and/or inspiration as he went along. Sunray has 16 different standing walls, designed in a labyrinthine spiral that can be a little disorienting. As you wander through the cabin you begin to notice that each room is constructed on a different level, often with dangerously low beams that punish the unwary or normal sized adult — Roberts wasn't a tall man. The lowest and largest room of the house sits a step down from the front entrance with a hand-built fireplace and chimney. Painted floor tiles and glass balls embedded in the concrete add colour to what must have been a comfortable escape from winter's SE gusts.

pendor harbour tides ~ january 2025

Cooler colour codes indicate lower tides. For kayaks and small boats accessing Canoe Pass (Beaver Island), these colour codes (right) indicate what should usually provide sufficient depth for passage. Note: variability occurs due to barometric pressure, wind conditions, etc.

JANUARY ASTROLOGY

CAPRICORN: DEC. 22 – JAN. 19

Capricorns often experience hardship early in life, but their resourcefulness makes them survivors. Sometimes hard to get to know, they are loyal, responsible and down-to-earth. Your new year starts off positively with Saturn in Pisces from January to early February. Expect your creative spark to catch fire — but only if you let it. Open yourself to possibility by shedding the spiritual anchors that you've been dragging around since September. Start with your mother — she's held you down since the day you came out.

AQUARIUS: JAN. 20 - FEB. 18

Aquarians are original, independent humanitarians who shy away from emotional expression. This often makes them seem uncompromising and aloof. Aquarians are thoughtful listeners but they rarely tolerate someone they disagree with. This month, Mercury moves into your Twelfth House so hang on for a revitalizing metamorphosis. You will undergo a profound spiritual reckoning on Jan. 21 that will reveal the path forward. Breathe deep: An oil change will reveal an expensive problem with your transmission.

Harbour Spiel Jan. 2016: Applauding the five best beers of 2015

Moe Colton

This article originally appeared in the Harbour Spiel, Jan. 2016. Its author maintains its truth still applies.

I am good at one thing:

Beer.

I knock back 10 or so beers a night and unlike most of the flakes calling themselves beer drinkers these days, I mix it up.

Tons of guys drain a case before bed but how many can tell you the last time they tried something different?

Drinking only Coors or Corona for 20 years sounds like marriage — a complete waste of time and money.

I drink whatever beer's put in front of me and I've tried them all.

I'll share that accumulated wisdom in the hope of guiding you to a better appreciation of the craft that goes into my favourite drink.

MOLSON CANADIAN (ABV 5%)

"She's been with me longer than my scars," is from a country tune I wrote but it applies to Canadian too.

Molson's finest is probably the reason I didn't finish Grade 11 (I found my calling early).

Back then I didn't pay much attention to a beer's subtleties — it was all about getting through the flat faster than my beer pig buddy Gary.

Later on I came to drink alone, without distraction, and began to recognize the qualities that exposed Mr. Molson's genius.

The maple leaf on the can should've been a hint.

How could I have missed that wispy maple veil that wraps the flavour yet never intrudes?

Magic.

The classic Canadian. If you don't enjoy a half-dozen of these (what the author calls a 'lunch kit') a few times a year, you should move back to the States.

It's been around since 1959 but only recently received the recognition it has long deserved.

In 2006, Molson Canadian won the gold medal for "North American style lager" at the prestigious Canadian Brewing Awards.

I was there but for the usual reasons, don't remember it.

Serve Canadian cold as a hali-but's butthole with lightly salted potato chips — NO salt and vinegar.

Save your salt and vinegar chips to eat with beer you'll want to rid your taste buds of — like just about any of the so-called "craft brews."

They all taste like perfume.

LUCKY LAGER (ABV 4.8%)

When I travel, I drink what the Romans drink.

When I travel to Vancouver Island, the Romans drink Lucky.

And why not?

The beer's as good as any out there.

Somehow it got a reputation for being low-brow woodpecker snot but think again hippie — Lucky's got serious taste.

Everyone on the Island already knows Mainlanders are ignorant of everything except the fibre content of their Lululemons.

So they don't mind being alone in their appreciation of one of BC's best beers — all the more for them.

And they need a lot.

Labatt Brewing Company declared Cumberland, BC to be the "Luckiest Town in Canada" in 2002 due to its incredible consumption.

As they say on the Island, "It isn't what you have in your pants that makes you thankful, but what you have in your glass."

Pair with a burger — the bitterness of the hops and high carbonation work to cut through the fat and cleanse the palette.

Vancouver Island beer drinkers covet the Lucky brand and because of its booming taste, you should too.

OLD STYLE PILSNER (ABV 5%)

I don't always drink a flat of beer by myself but when I do, it's almost always my nostalgic favourite, Old Style Pilsner.

When I was a kid, all my alcoholic idols drank Old Style.

It was the first beer I drank.

I'd barely moved out of my diapers when Grandpa first tilted a glass of leftover Old Style foam and spit to my mouth.

It's been my favourite ever since.

First brewed in Lethbridge in 1926, Old Style now ships from Vancouver — perfect for 100-mile diets.

I spent the late '90s in Montreal and can say they would have been the best years of my life if I wasn't missing my Old Style.

I adapted with help of smoked meat and narcotics but I won't live anywhere I can't count the rabbits again.

It's a clean, crisp lager beer with

How many rabbits can you find? The author insists there are 103.

medium body, smooth palate and distinctive hoppy aroma and finish.

So, it makes the perfect palette cleanser to pair with creamy cheese.

In other words, unless you want to look like a pretentious ass, put the wine away when you serve Camembert and brie — and serve Pil instead.

KOKANEE (ABV 5%)

Few know that Kokanee has been around just as long as Molson Canadian — since 1959.

It's now BC's bestselling lager but let's face it, we don't drink Kokanee for the taste.

We drink it because we think Sasquatches are fun and its bright blue can makes an excellent target.

It's popularity with the weekend warrior becomes clear when you head off-road in BC.

You don't find a midden of shotgun shells and Dorito bags without a predictable number of Kokanee cans mixed in like redneck potpourri.

Kokanee is lightly hopped, flavourful and so pure you can almost taste the beaver's bladder from the mountain stream that goes into it.

Pair with with pulled pork or pasta.

Get two of these — eight is never enough.

BUDWEISER (ABV 5%)

I know Bud isn't technically "Canadian" but it's the most popular beer north of the wall and is every bit as good as anything else we got.

And despite what your know-it-all son-in-law will tell you, there's no difference in alcohol content between Bud and most Canadian beers.

Bud and Canadian are both five per cent alcohol by volume.

One interesting factoid that does set Bud apart from other beers: Anheuser-Busch adds 30 per cent rice to their recipe of hops and barley malt.

The result is a gluten-free beer and one that makes any refined beer drinker's top five.

If it's not in yours, you should go sit under a tree and ponder what your problem is.

Pair with cedar plank salmon.

The King of Beers? Maybe more like the Earl but Bud still makes the top five.
